Kauai

Kauai - am Spouting Horn

A large, dark brown wooden sign with yellow lettering stands on two thick, textured wooden posts. The sign is positioned in front of a green metal railing. In the background, three people are visible: a man in a white shirt and hat, a woman in a blue shirt, and another person in a blue jacket. The ground is reddish-brown dirt with some sparse green vegetation. A large, dark rock lies on the ground in front of the sign. The background is filled with lush green trees and foliage.

Planning a brief visit?

Drive the 11-mile crater rim

1-2 hours – See these first

2-4 hours – Add these

Steam Vents
Feel the volcano's heat

Walk to the caldera rim or take a longer trail to a farming bank where sulfur crystals grow.

Caldera rim – Easy 1/4 mile (0.4 km) round-trip path.

Sulphur Banks – Easy 1/4 mile (1.6 km) round-trip trail.

Thomas A. Jaggar Museum
Discover scientific and Hawaiian perspectives on volcanoes

Visit the museum's cliff-top overlook for one of the best views of Kilauea caldera.

Short, paved path

Thurston Lava Tube (Nāhuku)
Walk where a river of lava flowed 550 years ago

Experience a rain forest of giant tree ferns and rare native songbirds on your way to and from this underground lava tube.

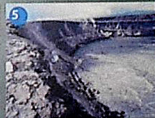

Easy 1/2-mile (0.8 km) loop trail

Southwest Rift
Look into huge earth cracks

See where the volcano ripped open as magma pushed through Kilauea's southwest rift zone.

Caution – sulfur fumes. People with asthma and other respiratory or heart ailments should avoid this area.

Halema'uma'u Overlook
Peer into a sacred crater, home of a Hawaiian goddess

Walk to the crater rim and see steam, sulfur crystals and lava rock – all forms of the volcano's daily pulse.

Easy 1/2 mile (0.8 km) round-trip trail

Caution – sulfur fumes. People with asthma and other respiratory or heart ailments should avoid this area.

Kilauea Iki Overlook
Trek into a crater where lava fountains gushed

Hike across a steaming, but now silent, lake of lava erupted in 1959.

Moderate to challenging 4-mile (6.5 km) round-trip hike
